The unusual form in which the Daily. Press appears to-day requires a few words of explanation. While the commercial importance of the Overland Trade Report renders it quite impossible to tamper with its arrangements for the sake of supplying the need which may exist for an overland newspaper, of interest togeneral rewlers who have nothing directly to do with commerce, we are not insensible to the fact that a great many people here must require a summary of general news, to send home to non-commercial friends. We intend to meet this want by publishing on the morning of the departure of the regular English and French mails such a paper as is now presented to our readers. one, that is to say, which contains all the most interesting local intelligence since the departure of the previous mail; without excluding the fresh news of the morning, whatever that may be.
